NEWS of the WEEK

STRAW IN THE WIND
Providence, R. I.—The elections of the smallest state in the Union created a furor throughout the country. Charles F. Risk, Republican on a strictly anti-New Deal platform, soundly beat the Democratic nominee for senator, Antonio Manno, who backed the Roosevelt program, lock, stock, and barrel. O. P. triumphantly hailed Rhode Island's election as harboring a Republican victory in 1936. Democrats issued long statements explaining that it was absolutely important.

THE POT SIMMERS
Rome, Italy—The fair sex enters the Italo-Ethiopian embroilment. Half-naked African maidens shoulder bayonet-tipped rifles. Ethiopian women consider yielding their jewels to help finance Haile Selassie's armies. Italian mothers and wives vow to sacrifice sons and husbands in Mussolini's service. Englishwomen start a chain letter boycott Italian goods. Meanwhile, Ethiopia's crack diplomat, Haile Selassie, departs for Japan to work on a reputed munitions contract, while Athens reports 1,500 malaria-stricken Fascist troops enroute to Rhodes for hospitalization.

HOUSEWIVES REBEL
Detroit, Michigan—For every 100 animals on farms and ranches in 1934, there are only 84 this year. From June, 1933, to June, 1935, meat prices jumped 54%. Detroit housewives grumbled long enough, then 1,500 of them met, formed the Women's League Against the High Cost of Living, refused to buy meat. Butchers had to shut up shop. Shoppers and dealers squawked. They blamed high prices on last summer's drought and the AAA's killing program. The Women's issue, headed by Mrs. Mary Zuk, refused to pay "prices that are justified."

GARRIDO'S GUNS BARK ONCE TOO OFTEN

Villahermosa, Tabasco — For 15 years Tomas Garrido y Canabal cracked a whip over the State of Tabasco. Last month anti-Garrido students demonstrated in Tabasco's capital. Garrido's henchmen characteristically silenced them with machine guns. So Mexico's President, Lazaro Cardenas, decided to get rid of Tabasco's boss. But Garrido locked himself and family into two private planes and gained America's protection in Puerto Rico. Here he can contemplate fortunes in New Orleans, San Francisco, Nova Scotia and Louisiana.

BANK PRESIDENT GUILTY OF FRAUD

New York City—In 1933 the New York Federal District Court indicted Charles E. Mitchell of criminal intent in falsifying his income tax. But the Bureau of Internal Revenue billed him $1,275,644 for 1932 and 1930 income taxes plus the 50% penalty for fraud. He appealed. Now, after nearly two years, the Board of Tax Appeals declares the ex-president of the National City Bank—the city's largest—guilty of fraud on all four main points. He owes the government $1,211,362.

VERY GERMAN A POTENTIAL JEW-ARRESTER

Berlin, Germany—A German law grants any bystander to seize an offending culprit. "The Black Nazis," Nazi news-organ, advises Germans that under this law every German may arrest offending Jews, and may use force. But "The Black Nazis" advised amateur cops to clamp on handcuffs only in extreme cases.

LIGHT POLE SMASHED; BETHEL MAN FINED

Following a crash into an electric light pole opposite Maple Inn, on Monday evening, James Wiles was arrested by State Patrolman Wesley Records of Rumford on a charge of drunken driving. In the Rumford Municipal Court Tuesday morning he was found guilty and paid a fine of $100 and costs.

The electric light and pole were broken and the front of the car damaged. Lights in the section were affected for a short time that evening and the pole was replaced and repairs completed the next morning.

BREAK AT LORD'S GARAGE

A burglary was attempted at Lord's Garage early Wednesday morning. Evidently entrance was made through the basement and doors were forced until the office was reached. Nothing was taken but an attempt was made to open the safe.

Harry Jordan, who lives across the street, was awakened by the bell on the gas pump, but the thieves made their escape before help could be summoned.

COMEDY, "OLD GOLD" AT LOCKE MILLS, FRI-SAT.

The comedy, "Old Gold" will be given at the Town Hall, Locke Mills, by the Greenwood Community Club on Thursday and Friday evenings of this week. The cast: College Students;

Gordon Phillips, Merle Ring Edmund Kidder, Clayton Lapham Jane Davies, Barbara Bennett Amy Thomas, Sylvia Lapham Frances Heming, Avis Salls Miss Ann Kidder, Anna Bryant Prof. Marmaduke Hooper, Earl Noyes

Two Actors:

Peter Rawson, Verne Corkum Jack Carey, Eldon Hathaway Specialty Singers, Sylvia Morgan, Merle Lurvey

Dancing girls: Bernice Jordan Margaret Long, Theresa Coolidge Ethelyn Kimball, Margaret Coolidge, Edith Cross, Rita Salls

Singing Chorus: Elvia Cole, Laura Seames, Mary Davis, Sylvia Lapham, Margaret Coolidge, Edith Cross, — Kimball, — Hanscom

The story of the play: A group of co-eds and their chaperon come to an old country house to have a nice quiet week end to rehearse their class play. Rumor has it that the house is haunted. An old aunt of two of the boys tells of the ghosts that are supposed to be in the place and after several strange happenings the students decide to set a trap. There are situations of suspense and horror, screams and also many laughs provided by Prof. Hooper, the nature loving chaperon, who is always "in a dither" about his butterflies and specimens.

In between all the conjuring of ghosts and burglars they have occasional opportunities to continue with the rehearsal, which brings in some lovely singing and dancing numbers.

A romance develops during all the excitement and the play ends with a gorgeous wedding scene—bridesmaids, flower girl, minister, etc.

All is ready for opening night—dances, songs and acting in fine shape and there has been a good advance sale of tickets and a fine turn out is expected.

MRS. LEON KIMBALL

The death of Ruth Clifford Kimball occurred at her home at South Albany Sunday Aug. 11, following a long illness. Mrs. Kimball was born at Candia, N. H. She is survived by her husband, Leon Kimball; three children, Mrs. Verna Robinson, Ivan Kimball, Lucy Kimball and other relatives. Services were held from the home Tuesday at 1 p. m. Interment was at Blakeslee Cemetery.

STATE SUMMER VISITORS DAY AT BAR HARBOR THIS WEEK FRIDAY

If you don't have time to go on more than one trip a year, or even if you do, just mark a circle around the date August 16 on the family calendar.

On that day the third annual Summer Visitor's Day will be celebrated at Bar Harbor and the way the event is shaping up at the present moment, it will probably be all odds the best of these affairs that have yet been produced.

Conceived by Governor Louis J.

Brann in 1933 as a means of paying our respects to the thousands of summer visitors who come here yearly, Summer Visitor's Day proved immediately popular not only with our out-of-State guests but with our own people as well.

The first year over 5,000 people congregated in Augusta to enjoy the comprehensive program which had been prepared. Last year over 10,000 attended.

This year, with the event moved for the first time away from the State Capitol, at least 15,000 are expected to be present. In common with other years, plenty of seats provided at Bar Harbor's beautiful athletic field where the affair will be held.

Summer Visitor's Day has earned the distinction of being one of the most unique events held anywhere.

World renowned figures in the worlds of music, art, the theatre, sports, journalism, the screen, and literature donate their services, free of charge to round out a program glittering with talent.

This year, for instance, Walter Damrosch, Doris Doe, Ed Wynn, Mitzie Green, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Henry Morganthau, Bill Cunningham, Kenneth Roberts and a long list of others equally notable will entertain the assembled thousands. In addition, a historical procession in which the summer residents of Bar Harbor will participate will be presented.

Everything, of course, is as free as the sea air that blows over Acadia National Park. Everybody is invited to come along and enjoy the fun. The date again is Friday, August 16, the place, the athletic field at Bar Harbor.

BETHEL AND VICINITY

Misses Muriel Boyker and Geneva True of Portland are spending several weeks with Mr. and Mrs. M. W. Boyker at Bethaven.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Frost of Kingfield and Irving Kimball of East Bethel were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. G. N. Sanborn.

Mrs. French stood the trip unusually well for one of her years, and on the following day was able to attend a picnic. She will remain at North Andover for several weeks with relatives. Mr. Bean and daughter, accompanied by Mrs. Bean, who has been the guest of relatives for the past 10 days, returned to their home here Monday.

NATIONAL GUARD HERE EN ROUTE TO N. Y. CAMP

Several cars and trucks of an advance detachment were in town on Wednesday morning en route to Pine Camp, near Philadelphia, N. Y., where the annual maneuvers will be held from Aug. 17 to 31.

Officers in charge of the detachment included Gen. Albert Greenlaw of Augusta, Lieut. Col. Daniel Dexter of Lewiston, Lieut. Col. Don C. Metcalf, Capt. Clyde W. Metcalf, and Sgt. Robert Morton. The party planned to be at Fort Ethan Allen Wednesday night and at Pine Camp Street.

Field artillery of the National Guard, also motorized will pass through Bethel on Route 2, Sunday, on its way to the maneuvers in New York State.

SUNDAY MORNING IN THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

Through the kindness of Mrs. William R. Chapman and the courtesy of Harold C. Furlong, Portland, the Congregational Church is expected to be present. In common with other years, plenty of seats provided at Bar Harbor's beautiful athletic field where the affair will be held.

The organ numbers will be: Organ Prelude, Andante Cantabile, Tschaikowsky Offertory, Meditation, Massanet Postlude, Grand Choeur in F.

The quartette numbers: Jerusalem from "Gaelle," Gounod Some Blessed Day, Waring God is a Spirit, Bennett

The members of the Church will be glad to welcome their friends and summer guests at this service, as at the regular Sunday services every week.

PERRY-CHADBORNE

Johnson O. Perry of Waterford and Miss Karlene H. Chadbourne of South Paris were married at the Methodist Parsonage Monday evening by the Rev. P. J. Clifford, the single ring service being used.

A picnic dinner will be served beneath the trees. The host furnishes coffee and ice cream.

Skilled Workmen Still

Manufacture Quill Pens

Modern inventions have superseded the craftsman, but the quill pen still finds employment for a handful of skilled workers. The quill dresser of modern London still handles the unshod quill, bakes it, and points it, as his predecessors did in the Eighteenth century before the steel pen had been heard of. The market is mainly with the legal profession and a small company of writers.

There is still a man in England whose founder made the first keys of Newgate, it still receives locks by hand, and declares that there is no machine-made lock to compare with the hand-made article.

London has a workshop where craftsmen turn out jeweled talismans and amulets in accordance with astrological signs for customers who believe that their horoscope may go through life. These costly ornaments are sent to every part of the world, for, despite education and civilization and sophistication, there are people who still believe in the magical power of an amulet.

Even the bow and arrow have their craftsmen, today as of old, and just as you may buy from the modern bowyer a splendid hand-made bow, so you may order from the London bowyer who has inherited from a long line of craftsmen the art of case feathering an arrow, this article as well turned out as in medieval days.—Tit-Bits Magazine.

Horses Not Natural Jumpers
Horses, it is believed, are not natural jumpers, although they have been trained to clear 9-foot hurdles with a spring on their back. In Australia they have been known to dig up stones in order of waterholes from which they were separated until he could not find them. Val. Ross' theory.

CHRISTIAN STATESMANSHIP

D. S. Brooks

There never was a time when Christian Statesmanship" was so greatly needed as in our day. The masters of government are not lacking in scholarship nor in culture. But what is—so sadly wanting?

I am not disposed in my writings to make any disturbance as to the existing of religious creeds. I have always believed in religious freedom and free speech. The "faith" of a statesman might well that of any of the Protestant churches; or that of the Jew; or Catholic; or any other—as far as I am concerned, if they truly worship God and live out Christ's golden Rule. But we can plainly see in so many instances that God is left out of the programme altogether. Like as was so aptly stated last week by a prominent German official (if the idea of the divine is at all suggested to his mind) expressed as "Me und Gott" (me and God). And we quickly note that "God" is crossed off, leaving the supreme "me" in charge: to execute opposing political and religious beliefs. I trust that none of us are lacking in sympathy for oppressed peoples in any part of our world. Are we, personally, a measure, responsible for the present terrible acts of intolerance and persecution? I choose to bring it up in a future issue. So far we have apparent religious liberty in America. But that is one of our prized possessions that is soon to leave us at the rapid rate of momentous changes. We rest comparatively easy; but what has seemed like rock foundations are toppling from under that as well as in other matters. Roosevelt will always be President. A "Musical" or a "Hitler" may yet sit in Washington.

Jesus taught the brotherhood of man, and laid down the Golden Rule. But those that have a sufficiency of this world's goods to make them comfortable, are the ones to the sufferings of others.

One who has a plenty said she did not think the times were hard. Great magazines and newspapers cater mostly to "wealth" and to the reading public discarded opinions so many times and held the Truth. The masses are easily cheated by promises made to secure votes, and elect many deserving politicians to positions of trust. Look at the long string of aspirants for office in Congress. Are we looking for bargains? Some of the offerings look dear at price! It reminds one of a sudden rush of canvassers trying to sell on a "cheap soap racket" where the profits are large and the product is poor.

God almighty takes all things into consideration. He permits the tyrants to handle a plenty of power, for a big sweep, that at a decisive moment they may overstep their bounds and get out of the way; thus saving their constituents the trouble of executing justice. But God is too merciful to let His people deceived into following such leadership, to bring on other world catastrophes.

A real worthwhile leader cannot be confused with the back-raking, ambitious kind. He has wares (any ideas) to sell that are full value for the price, when the public uses its bargaining with unscrupulous politicians and investigates and exposes at his market. The World War never have heard his name, but God has such leaders in mind; and is waiting for the hour to subdue that he may be an "Elijah;" "Moses;" or a "Daniel" with the concerns of government; whether it exists in State or National affairs.

Asriel, of Babylonian fame, was a youth when he was kidnapped from his Jewish parents. He was a God-fearing young man and believed sincerely in God. He did not worry about the future might hold in store for him. His great hold was in his devotion to Jehovah. Nothing could keep him from his daily habit of prayer. The enemies of true religion could not whip him. When the time came for filling a responsible place in the nation, even the king chose this clean, worthy man above all mentally.

qualified fellows for the job, because he had supreme confidence in Daniel's great worth.

In conclusion—are there not God-fearing qualified men today to fill all public positions of honor and trust? There surely must be! Why not search for them and make secure the foundation of government upon Christian Statesmanship? (Thank you.)

GROVER HILL

Several from this place attended the Mills auction at West Bethel last week.

HOME TRADE AND ADVERTISING

One of the generally accepted functions of a newspaper—is to chearfully and unsatisfactorily promote the interests of its town. It is a task gladly accepted by nearly all editors and publishers and their work in behalf of their local enterprises is doubtless of inestimable value to the towns thus favored.

Without doubt, it is possible for our readers to purchase at home stores many articles which they have formed the habit of buying elsewhere. Goods of novel design, innovations or improvements, are desired and bought by local people but many times not from local stores although the article is in stock here at the time. The purchaser buys where his patronage is invited. If the merchandise were as well advertised by home merchants as by outside stores, it is likely that the sale would have been made here.

Although we believe that our readers naturally customers of local merchants are entitled to the courtesy of local newspaper advertising by their stores, we must say that frequently there is no way of effecting by traveling or sending elsewhere for merchandise.

However, this is plain: newspaper advertising makes more trade possible for our merchants; it tends to give better service and value for local customers; and it makes a better newspaper possible.

HOW QUICK CAN YOU STOP?

Some time ago a questionnaire was submitted to motorists by the city of Memphis concerning the distances necessary for stopping cars going at given speeds. The survey demonstrated that the average driver has an exceedingly poor conception of stopping distances and that he believes he can stop his car to a halt in a much shorter space than is actually required.

For example, drivers were asked how many feet would be needed to stop a car with four-wheel brakes going at a speed of 40 miles per hour on ordinary highway. Two out of ten of the drivers answered less than 100 feet, 150 per cent on about 110 feet; the heaviest majority of 20 per cent answered 110 to 120 feet and 141 per cent answered 120 to 130 feet.

The next inquiry was to 50 feet and it was given by less than 6 per cent of the drivers. Only a number of motorists realized that no matter how good a car's brakes, it is impossible to stop within 50 feet.

That a car going 40 miles an hour will stop faster than that with braked wheels.

Memphis has provided a good example showing that we vitally need education and intelligent "thinking" for drivers and that the driver who has operated a car for 10 years should be given as much as well as the beginner.

Adequate knowledge of the materials and capabilities of the mechanical parts of a car is a fundamental of safe driving.

STRIKE HALTS NAVY BUILDING

Camden, N. J.—Since May 13th, members of the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilders Workers of America, Local No. 1, have kept the New York Shipbuilding Co., the country's second largest shipyard, idle. Workers demand a closed shop, 15% wage increase, no piece work. Navy Department officials are impatient for the four destroyers and three cruisers half-completed inside the company's gates. They sent an ultimatum to John Farrell Norton, the company's president: either agree to arbitrate the strike, or the Navy will finish the work itself. Company officials returned an eleventh-hour notice that they would arbitrate. But they would not permit discussion of the strikers' chief demand—a closed shop.

FOUR-BLOW KNOCKOUT

Chicago, Illinois—Joe Louis, 21-year-old, straight-living, colored youth made his entire camp promise to go on the water wagon for six months if he knocked out "King" Levinsky in the first round. For the first minute of the fight Louis followed Levinsky steadily around the ring. Then the "Brown Bomber" unleashed four blows $25,000,000 in America—$16,000,000 which floored Levinsky three times, for machinery, $8,500,000 for awarded him a technical knockout ton.

LUSITANIA TO BE SALVAGED

Kinsale, Ireland—About 8½ miles off Old Head of Kinsale, Capt. Henry Dell of the Ophir marked a spot to be the center of a square 3-5 of a mile on each side, which he will comb thoroughly for the gold-laden hulk of the Lusitania, sunk by German torpedoes in 1915. A sonic depth-finder gives a constant profile of the ocean's floor in the chart-room of the Ophir. When and if the Lusitania is found, Chief Diver Jim Jarrett will descend in a 3,300 pound steel suit to start the job. Like the diver's suit, he will blunting a path to the purser's office. If he follows the custom of many other divers, he will shake the hand of the first corpse he sees before starting work.

DEAD HEATS

Saratoga, N. Y.—Coldstream and Red Rain thundered down the home stretch. As they crossed the finish line, judges squinted in vain. They couldn't decide which had won. They called a dead heat—the third this year on a Metropolitan track. The New York State Racing Commission announces that after October 1st heats will be run. If the electric eye cameras, which can distinguish a horse that wins by as little as one inch, will be installed at all Metropolitan tracks.

Kozhukhov, chairman of Amotorg, which handles all trade between the two countries, rejoiced not only in the figures, just released, to show that Soviet purchases last July reached $611,000 for July 1934. In the first seven months, Russia's "Brown Bomber" unleashed four blows $25,000,000 in America—$16,000,000 which floored Levinsky three times, for machinery, $8,500,000 for awarded him a technical knockout ton.

LIVING COSTS GO UP WITH GOVERNMENT COSTS

The more money the government spends, the more money it must collect from taxpayers. This year Uncle Sam is spending 7,194 million dollars—nearly ten times as much as he spent in 1933.

Every dollar of this rising and record-breaking amount must come out of your income and your savings. Most of it comes from taxes on real estate and on corporations that must pass the tax along to you.

The chart above shows how these indirect taxes have increased the costs of your necessities in the past two years.

FIVE GOVERNORS TO ATTEND DEBUT OF CAMBRIDGE MOTOHOME COLONY MONDAY

First Prefabricated Homes in New England Displayed Under Auspices of R. H. White Co. as Phase of National Housing Movement to Revitalize Building Industry.

© Hamilton M. Wright News Features

Scenery of the American Motohome Colony in a picturesque setting on Memorial Drive, Cambridge, Mass., upon which industrialists of the world have focused their interest following a recent joint announcement of Owen D. Young and Bayard Swope that the General Electric Company had subsidized Houses, Inc., sponsors of this ultra-modern type of building.

CAMBRIDGE, MASS.—An elaborate program which will be broadcast over the Yankee network and which five New England Governors and many national leaders will participate has been arranged for the official opening of the American Motohome Colony here on Monday at 10 a. m. The colony was recently assembled here under auspices of R. H. White Company in co-operation with the Federal Housing Administration, Commonwealth of Massachusetts, the Metropolitan District Commission, Boston and others participating in the national housing movement designed to revitalize the building industry and stimulate employment in the building trades.

Local Interest Amplified

The tremendous local interest in the acquisition of this colony of modern prefabricated homes New England display by R. H. White Co. was recently amplified following a joint statement by Owen D. Young and Bayard Swope to the effect that Houses, Inc., developer of the American Motohome Colony, had been subsidized by General Electric Company and its President, Foster Gunnison, dynamic young New York lawyer, had been commissioned to carry on an exhaustive exploration of the antiquated frame work building practices and aid in management and financing of enterprises engaged in producing modern homes that would within easy buying reach of those whose incomes are in the brackets.

A Builder's Laboratory

Houses, Inc., according to Mr. Young and Swope, will not sell homes but will function as a medium through which modern production methods and more economical principles of design, construction and management will be applied to the building industry.

In direct assertion that the Federal Housing Administration was to participate in reviving our greatest industry, home building, held deep significance to industrialists and financial interests over the world with the result that this first colony of prefabricated homes has become the focal point of their interest.

The American Motohomes to be opened here Monday are the first type of modern homes to come within the category of the interests of Houses, Inc., and mark the birth of a new industry in which mass production methods and their inherent economies are being applied to the building trade in an effort to revive a stagnant market by effecting radical reductions in the cost of small homes.

Motohome Indestructible

The American Motohome is framed of prefabricated steel into which are set fire, sound and termite-proof prefinished panels that are practically indestructible and afford perfect insulation. They are air-conditioned, indirectly lighted, equipped with every practical mechanical device and contrivance designed to make home life healthier, happier and more economical. The heating system that automatically heats the homes in the winter reverses its function and is used to cool and humidify them in the summer.

Can Be Unbuttoned

The Motohome can be "unbuttoned" at any point so that additional rooms or even entire stories can be "hooked" on almost at will or they may be entirely disassembled and moved to another location. Motohomes of from four to ten rooms or more can be assembled in a few weeks. Housekeeping is a matter of pushing switches.

Moto-Unit A Magical Nerve Center

One of the most important scientific contributions to the building trades in many years is the Moto-Unit, magical nerve center, "the thing that makes the Motohome go" and around which it is built as an automobile is built around its engine. The Moto-Unit is built in the first floor construction and contains in a steel cabinet hardly larger than a pantry the airconditioning, heating and hot water units, all basic plumbing and electrical connections.

Colony Completely Furnished

The entire colony has been furnished and decorated by R. H. White Company.

EXPENDITURES

To induce or procure any state or persons to vote for the constitution to be submitted to voters on September 9, 1935; the constitution to be amended by a resolution of the legislature to provide for a bond for furnishing and paying additional funds necessary maintenance, interest and the payment of bonds issued by Deer Isle-Sedgwick Bridge District.

Selecting National Committeemen

Each state, territory, insular possession and the District of Columbia has one man and one woman member of the national committee of each party. They are elected for four years by caucuses of the delegates to the national convention from each of the above-mentioned political divisions.

Chamois Skin

Chamois skin is the soft pliant leather prepared from the skins of chamois (a small goat like antelope); also from sheep and goats. The process consists of frizzing the skin by rubbing with pumice, and working off into it to take the place of the astringent ordinarily used in tanning.

Leprosy Not Contagious

A leper expert asserts that no one knows how leprosy spreads. It is not contagious, and there is no known way of bacteria, exhibited today, spreading it from person to person. It is only known that when a person has leprosy he also has these bacilli.

Records show the average growth of a live oak in a seven-year period is 17.8 inches in circumference.

THE MENACE OF THE LOBBY

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman, Sentinels of the Republic

Congress, as this is written, is plunging into a probe of lobbies and their influence upon national legislation.

Not a bad idea—even though it may prove a two-edged sword, slashing at pressure ponies from within as well as from without!

But whomever it may wound, the investigation will serve a worthy purpose if it brings forcibly to the attention of the American people the growing evil of rule by organized groups—whether composed of office-holders or of private citizens. For it is through the power of lobbies and of pressure politics that such forces seek to utilize Congress as a lever to loosen the foundations on which rest our American form of government.

The American people must realize—

That if economic theorists can, by Federal law, prohibit or utterly control the organization of business, big and little...

If visionary zealots can, by Federal law, control the 14th, the rearing, and the governing of all children...

If the education zealots can, by Federal law, control all education and eliminate the private and the church schools and colleges...

If the zealots in the arts and crafts and unions can, by Federal law, control the methods, the technique, and the volume of all production...

If every other group devoted to some moral or economic theory can force it on the people through pressure on our national legislature...

Then the republican form of government, under which the United States became great and free and happy, will be strangled by a tyranny depriving citizens of liberty of mind, of body and of action.

Only when the system of pressure politics—from within or without—is finally destroyed, will the great body of unorganized, self-reliant American citizens, who constitute the backbone of our nation, come into its own.

An Outstanding Group of Newspaper Features!

Addis Ababa, New York, Geneva, Moscow, Washington, London, Tokyo, Panama—these names and many others have appeared in the CITIZEN during the past few months since we have published the two columns of "NEWS OF THE WEEK"—authentic reports from correspondents of NEWS-WEEK, the famous news-magazine, whose men are scattered over the entire world in readiness to forward prompt accurate dispatches. CITIZEN readers are fortunate in securing this weekly feature and at no increase in cost.

Another service, exclusive in this newspaper, is ECONOMIC HIGHLIGHTS. The material in this weekly column is gathered by an organization having exceptional facilities for securing authentic information concerning economic events. Interest in the topics covered is universal as everyone is affected directly or indirectly, by the events, projects, decisions, and industries reported.

It seems fitting on this page to extend a welcome to our new readers. It is our hope that they will enjoy the CITIZEN, and not only renew their subscriptions, but tell their friends and all who may be interested in the territory covered by us, so that they too may become subscribers.

"WORLD AFFAIRS" by William C. Utley—a front page feature of the magazine section. Mr. Utley's page covers a wide range—national industries, foreign countries, their affairs or relations with this country. Whatever his subject it is always ably handled and entertaining and instructive to readers of all ages.

The National Geographic Society, with facilities unequaled by any institution or company, furnishes a department which each week illustrates and depicts a people or a country in a highly educational and informative way. Read their contribution this week. "Sheba's Land," a description of Ethiopia where world interest is centered now, is especially timely.

These CITIZEN features deserve your weekly perusal. Their quality is equal in every way to the subject matter of expensive magazines. Their content is timely, reaching many of our readers before it is possible for other publications to become distributed. And in the CITIZEN their cost is negligible.

"OLD HOME" TUG AT HEARTSTRINGS

William Wood

A little country home may be a lonely place indeed, lacking much that city folk common, daily need! Smiling fields, the winding brook, the orchard, and the hill, big pine tree, or sturdy oak—each a mystic thrill which grips you through successive years,

In your dreams it charms, holds you in as fond embrace; your good Mother's arms, the city drew you long ago, absorbed your time and strength, gave you your chance, or sheltered you, sickened you at length! Of its shows and shams, a sigh for change and change, crave a peace they have found,

Ends simple and sincere, wonder what possesses them incidentally? All the friends of yesterdays, old scenes that used to be, in the spot that once was home, feel a magnet still draws and tugs their worn hearts,

And fairly makes them ill!

Off they go to see anew the scenes that first they saw,

Something grips their inner soul,

Reverential awe!

Great changes have occurred,

Once they said "Good-bye,"

Now they find the best of earth,

Here they hope to die!

Is something in "The Old Age"?

Mortal understands,

Fills you with an ecstasy,

Truth of Angel hands!

The past has gone to sleep,

Can you yourself grown old,

Something better for a while,

In Streets of Shining Gold,

Every mind is here appraised,

Walking feet find rest,

He is here for troubled heart,

To Heaven's best!

ORIGIN OF WOMAN AND LAUGHTER

B. V. William Wood

Wasn't taken from man's foot,

For beneath his crown,

As infer he had a right

To keep her humbled down!

Was she taken from his head?

Or her start in life,

As infer God made her for

As much as wife!

Shamed her from Adam's rib,

From his noble dome,

A help meet fit for him,

Magnet for his home,

Wits, however, say "Not so,"

Truth when fully known

Man had her origin

Adam's funnybone!

Was in such a funny way,

As Adam took a nap;

Wouldn't laugh to wake another,

As fortune in his lap?

Adam saw her first,

As puzzled what to do,

Asiced and overjoyed he cried,

Good! It can't be true!"

With a laughing sight,

Adam never knew just why,

Caused such rare delight!

Deep sleep the lonely man,

Ased things that never were,

Asaking, rubbed his eyes, then

Ased,

Aswarmly welcomed her,

As for which he sighed had

Asighed and told her so;

Asighter got its double start,

Asnever ceased to grow!"

"OLD HOME" TUG AT THE HEARTSTRINGS

William Wood

A little country home may be a lonely place indeed, lacking much that city folks
think common, daily need!
Smiling fields, the winding brook,
the orchard, and the hill,
big pine tree, or sturdy oak,
east a mystic thrill grips you through succeeding years,

In your dreams it charms holds you in as fond embrace your good Mother's arms!
city drew you long ago,
sobered your time and strength,
gave you your chance, or smothered you,

strokened you at length!
of its shows and shams
sigh for change and cheer crave a peace they have not found,

ends simple and sincere.
I wonder what possesses them,
incidentally.

The friends of yesterdays,
scenes that used to be,
in the spot that once was home feel a magnet still draws and tugs their worried hearts

fairly makes them ill!
if they go to see anew
the scenes that first they saw,
something grips their inmost
reverential awe!

bound changes have occurred since once they said "Good-by!"
where they find the best of earth,
here they hope to die!
There's something in "The Old face"

material understands,
fills you with an ecstacy,
such as Angel hands!

With the past has gone to stay on yourself grown old,
something better for a while
in Streets of Shining Gold!"

Every mind is here appressed,
feeling feet find rest,
is here for troubled hearts
to Heaven's beat!

wasn't taken from man's foot,
or beneath his crown,
but he had a right
to be humbled down!

was she taken from his head,
but her start in life,
her God made her for
as much as wife!

shamed her from Adam's rib,
from his noble dome,
a help meet fit for him,
a magnet for his home.

Was, however, say "Not so!
truth when fully known
man had her origin
Adam's funnybone!

in such a funny way,
Adam took a nap;
wouldn't laugh to wake and

MAINE AND HER
POULTRY COMPETITORS

In speaking on the subject "Maine Poultrymen and Her Competitors," to poultrymen assembled for the Fifth Annual Poultry School held at the University of Maine, H. L. Shrader, Senior Extension Poultryman, U. S. D. A. said:

"You Maine poultry raisers can deliver fresh eggs and poultry meat to the tourist trade in the summer and the rest of the year you have manufacturing areas—principally Boston, to consume your surplus. Do not think for a minute that you are far from a market. Modern transportation facilities have shortened distances.

"As I see the picture, your stiffest competition is going to come in the question of egg quality. A hen has no sense of geography and one fed in Indiana or Iowa can lay just as good an egg as her forty-second cousin in Maine. There is a great increase in interest in certain egg production states in the production of quality eggs. They see the premium quoted for nearby extras and want to know the steps they must take to put an egg of that quality on the market.

"You farmers and poultrymen in Maine do not have the high summer temperatures to combat but frequent gathering and prompt cooling help to retain those fresh egg qualities. Your poultry competitors are striving hard and succeeding to a certain degree to overcome their handicaps of temperature.

"Your main competitor, the region where over half the chickens in the United States are produced—commonly called the Corn Belt—has a lower feed cost. They should have for they produce the grain and you must buy the feed with transportation costs added. Your counterbalance to that is higher prices for eggs and poultry meat. I will say this, that on the average you put the feed to more efficient use than the average Midwest flock owner. Your breeding program also tends to reduce feed costs, your well bred birds are like a high-gearing machine—it will run a long ways on a gallon of gas if you can keep it out of low.

"Now in conclusion my admonition to you would be to keep the quality of the surplus eggs you market like Caesar's wife (above suspicion). Your competitors are producing some mighty high quality eggs. An egg or a chicken knows nothing about geography and distance from market can be partly overcome by proper handling.

"Meet competitors by keeping up your breeding program and practice liberal but scientific feeding. Find out the size of the flock that fits into your farm management plan and then plan your marketing, your breeding and your housing around that sized unit."

STATE OF MAINE

EAST STONEHAM

Miss Christine Nelson is enjoying two weeks vacation with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Nelson.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Wight of Gilead were guests of Mr. and Mrs. John Files, Sunday.

Miss Mudge, who has been the guest of Mrs. A. J. Anderson, returned to his home in Amesbury, Mass., August 7th.

Richard Files of Springfield, Mass., was the guest of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Files, over the weekend.

Mrs. Rose Weller, Ruth Weller and Mrs. Helen Young motored from Iowa City, Iowa, to East Stoneham arriving Saturday. Mrs. Weller and Ruth are guests of Mrs. O. C. Farrington. Mrs. Young is staying at Keewaydin Inn.

Thursday, Aug. 15th, the Ladies Aid will hold their annual church fair. The sale is at the K. of P. Hall. Supper will be served at the church vestry.

Mrs. Alice Dionne and Mrs. Blanche McKeen were in Lewiston for the day Wednesday.

Willis Warren has exchanged his old car for a Nash roadster.

Mrs. Christie Nelson entered the Maine General Hospital, Monday of this week, where she will submit to surgery. Her friends all wish her a speedy recovery.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Teppler of Hudson, Ohio, are spending their vacation at "Far-Away Farm" which is the Rev. Joel B. Hayden camp.

Betty Littlefield visited her aunt, Mrs. Alby Grover at Oxford for the past week.

The Allen reunion was held Sunday, Aug. 11, at the home of Edwin E. Allen. There were 70 present.

Mr. and Mrs. John Files, Donald and John Files, Jr., and Mrs. Alice Dionne camped on Speckle Mountain Saturday night. Although the weather was perfect when they started Saturday morning, it was rather a cold rainy night for them and they returned home early Sunday morning.

Mr. W. E. Long of Newtonville, Mass., is staying at his camp for a few days.

Mrs. Ethel Adams Smith and son, Roger, of Winthrop, Mass., were calling on relatives in town Sunday.

Mrs. Glendon Allen, who has been at Eye and Ear Infirmary, at Portland for the past two weeks has returned home.

Great Danes Improved in Germany

Great Danes were almost entirely bred in Germany, at least into their present perfection. German control of the breed in its early stages is proven by the fact that there were many Great Danes in this country owned almost entirely by Germans before the type was officially recognized.

Peculiarities of Cormorants

Cormorants seldom breed in captivity. Therefore the fisherman must hunt for young wild birds along the seashore. This is extremely difficult. But even after the birds are caught they must be trained, and it often takes several months to do this.

As Ship "Cuts" Water

Contrary to the popular view that a ship "cuts" the water with her bow to permit the forward movement of the hull, seven-eights of the total resistance is friction on the wetted surface—skin friction, so highly studied in the aeronautical field.

Back Warmer
Old timers loved their comfort. Jacques Coeur, financial genius of Joan of Arc's day, in Bourges, built a fireplace in his private chapel to warm his back on chilly mornings, while he prayed.

GRANDMOTHER'S RECIPES
LIBERAL WITH SOUR MILK

Miss Dakin, foods specialist for the Maine Extension Service.

She gives three reasons. "Warm weather usually brings a surplus of sour milk. Sour milk has all the food values it had when sweet.

Further, if each child gets its pint and adults their quart a day it means that one must use sweet milk, sour milk, buttermilk and milk products in a variety of ways."

Miss Dakin suggests the following ginger cake recipe using sour milk:

SOUR MILK GINGER CAKE

1-3 cup fat
1-2 cup sugar
1 cup molasses
1 egg
3 cups sifted pastry flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
1 scant teaspoon soda
1-2 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon ginger
1-2 teaspoon cloves
1-2 teaspoon cinnamon
1 cup sour milk

Cream together the sugar and fat. Add the molasses and beaten egg. Sift the dry ingredients together twice and add to the first mixture alternately with the milk. Bake in two shallow pans in a moderate oven 350°F. for 30 to 40 minutes. Serve hot with cream cheese or whipped cream.

GREENWOOD CITY

Mr. and Mrs. C. Buck and friends of Massachusetts attended the school reunion Sunday and have spent a few days at their camp here.

Mr. and Mrs. Allan Cole of Mechanic Falls were at George Cole's Sunday.

Miss Lucy Curtis of Woodstock has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Clyde Morgan.

Mr. and Mrs. Clifton Bickford of Providence, R. I., are spending a few days with Mrs. Anna Hayes.

NOTICE

The subscriber hereby gives notice that she has been duly appointed executrix of the estate of James J. Spinney late of Bethel in the County of Oxford, deceased, without bond. All persons having demands against the estate of said deceased are desired to present the same for settlement, and all indebted thereto are requested to make payment immediately.

Sun Spots Vary

Sun spots vary widely in size from small and very inconspicuous ones to multiple spots that string out to a length of 100,000 miles, according to a writer in the New York Herald Tribune. The average sun spot during maximum activity is about the size of a spot that would be produced if the earth, 8,000 miles in diameter, were used as a projectile and shot into the sun. While the sun spots look black on a photograph of the sun and when viewed directly, they are actually quite brilliant, and only appear black because they are so much cooler than the surrounding areas of the sun's atmosphere. Measurements made at Mount Wilson give the approximate temperature of the spots as 3,000 degrees absolute, the surrounding penumbra 8,400 degrees and the normal photosphere 5,740 degrees.

There are needs in your life which must be met if you continue to live. You must have air, food, drink and shelter. All these you may have, and life be as insipid as the white of an egg.

As much as you require these—they are not the only essentials. You need work, play, love. A life without love is a tragedy. You need God. Why starve your soul for lack of worship?

Have you lost worship out of your life. If so I pity you. Come let us worship and bow down. Let us make a joyful noise before the Lord our Maker. Worship with us Sunday morning.

NEW ENGLAND APPLE CROP 5,554,000 BUSHELS

The total New England apple crop this year is expected to total 5,554,000 bushels. This forecast by the New England Crop Reporting Service based on August 1 reports from growers, does not indicate an abundance, in fact only a moderate crop, but a crop much larger than the 3,011,000 bushel crop of 1934.

How many of these 5,554,000 bushels will come to market as fresh fruit is still somewhat of a question, but considering past experience some 4,105,000 bushels will probably be disposed of in this way. This part of the crop commonly known as the commercial crop, is nearly twice as large as the 2,218,000 bushel commercial crop of 1934, but is only 78% of the average commercial crop for the five years 1928-1932.

The McIntosh will probably make about two-thirds of a full crop and the Wealthys and Transparents may do a little better; Astrachan, Gravenstein, and Delicious are expected to produce between one-half and two-thirds of a full crop but the prospects for Baldwins and Northern Spys are reported at only 38% of a full crop and R. I. Greenings at 46%. Less than 60% of a full crop is expected for all varieties taken together. Although rainy weather made spraying difficult and promoted scab injury, orchardists report rather light damage from diseases and insects.

The United States total apple crop will be about 40% larger than the unusually light crop of 1934 and about 5% above the five year average. The United States commercial crop will be about 98,905,000 bushels compared with 73,534,000 bushels in 1934 and an average for the five years 1928-1932 of 97,895,000 bushels. Frequent rains at crucial spraying periods deterred apple growers east of the Mississippi River from protecting their orchards against scab infestation, and it is probable that scab injury may relegate much fruit in commercial areas, to the low quality grades. Intense heat in July produced some sun scald and burn in Washington and Oregon. In Maryland, Virginia, and West Virginia and also the Ozarks, orchards were showing need of rain by the first of August.

NATURAL COLOR MOVIES NOW PERFECTED

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

HOLLYWOOD, which of late years has probably contributed as much as literature to the shaping of American tastes and habits, is now going to work on our color sense. Producers of moving pictures in the next year are going to spend $150,000 in Hollywood, more than they ever spent before in any one year, and a considerable part of this vast sum will go into the making of pictures which not only move and talk, but will appear on the screen in the natural colors of their scenes and characters.

It is not rash to predict that whole new schemes of decoration, new styles in dress, new fads in make-up for women will be the result. If you don't believe this is possible, think back for a minute. Mae West says, "Come up and see me some time," and soon it is catch phrase that sweeps over the nation. Deolores Del Rio dances a number called the Carlocia, and before long we see thousands of couples doing the Carlocia on New York's St. Regis roof, in Los Angeles Cocoanut grove and in the Crystal Palace ballroom at Paw Paw lake, Michigan. A popular movie, "It Happened One Night," shows long sequences with Clark Gable riding in a cross-country bus; a few weeks later a Florida bus reports that its women passengers have increased some 25 per cent.

In 1927 Al Jolson sang a song called "Sunny Boy" in a picture entitled "The Jazz Singer." It was the first time the shadowy figures of the screen had ever been endowed with the power of speech. The picture revolutionized the entire industry and lifted it from a doubtful and often slapstick quality to one of the most important influences in American life. The picture grossed $3,500,000.

Now after many years of effort, moving pictures have been given another dimension, so to speak. We are allowed to see them in their true colors. Thackeray's "Vanity Fair" has been made into a movie called "Becky Sharp," in which the old varying shades of gray are banished in favor of full reproduction in natural color, bringing to life the polychrome resplendency of Becky's colorful time and sphere in every hue on the spectrum.

Another Step Forward. Color, say the producers and most of the critics, may be just as much a revolution as was sound eight years ago. It will not come so swiftly, however, for color is expensive, delicate to administer. Mistakes will undoubtedly be made, for color in the hands of a master can make the motion picture a thing of incomparable art, but a bungler could make it as frightful as a Christmas stocking. There will be both masters and bunglers. There always have been, in Hollywood.

Color in motion pictures is really almost as old as the cinema itself. Only natural color is new. The first colored movie, like so many other "firsts," was produced by Thomas Alva Edison in 1894. It was "Anna Belle, the Dancer." Every separate panel of film was tinted by hand, like we sometimes tint photographs today. All the colors were there, but not as you would see them if you looked at them in the flesh. The tinting artist was a sort of artistic embalmer. You looked at Anna Belle and said, "My, don't she look natural; they sure did a good job on her." Yet so eager was the firm audience for color, many films, some over 1,000 feet in length, were colored by this long and laborious process.

Since Edison's attempt more than 250 methods of making colored films have made an appearance. These are basically split into four different groups as to process; hand tinted, prismatic, tho-indoxyl and tone films.

Back in 1928 and 1929, fresh from sweeping triumphs in movies with sound, Warner Brothers decided to go the whole hog and make them in color, too. "On With the Show" and "Gold Diggers of Broadway" led the rush to color. But at that time only part of the spectrum could be reproduced and outlines were blurred. To make matters worse, the boom in color caused overproduction and forced the Technicolor Motion Picture corporation to turn out an inferior product. The amateur flocks have kept most producers shy of color ever since.

Responsible for Progress.

Although there are other companies—41 of them—in the field, who may later produce better color films, it is Technicolor which is responsible for the present state of perfection. It was named for the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the alma mater of Dr. Herbert Kalmus, who began experimenting with color cinematography (which is the elegant word for "shooting" movies) upon his graduation in 1914.

Miriam C. Cooper in the fall of 1925 returned from tropical jungles with a film called "Chang." Not even the success of this film could placate Cooper for the loss of exquisite jungle beauty when it was reproduced in varying shades of gray, rather than in all its primitive, colored splendor. Cooper determined to create color movies and associated himself with Dr. Kalmus.

Their work progressed slowly, but in 1921 they were able to make "Tol' of the Sea," with Anna May Wong, a color picture. It caused no flurries of excitement. Then in 1928 the boom came—and went.

Two years later Dr. Kalmus improved his process so that a full and faithful range of colors could be shown and images could be given definite outline. By this time nobody in Hollywood could be interested—except young Walt Disney, best known as the father of "Mickey Mouse."

Disney had never allowed precedent to interfere with his art. He believed in Technicolor and backed his belief with a "Silly Symphony" called "Flowers and Trees," produced by the new process. It was artistically successful. It was followed by "Three Little Pigs," which certainly needs no introduction anywhere in the world where there is a motion picture house and which has often been said (seriously) to have done more than any other one thing to take the mind of the world off the gloom of depression.

Whitneys Take It Up.

Certainly Mr. Disney's backers ended the depression for Technicolor, for they it was who interested John Hay ("Jock") Whitney and his cousin, Cornelius Vanderbilt ("Sonny") Whitney in color movies. The Whitney millions bought 15 per cent of the shares of Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation and organized Pioneer Pictures, Inc., to produce pictures by that process.

One of the first steps of the Whitneys was a wise one. From the New York stage they brought Robert Edmond Jones, whose design work for "Rebound," "Mourning Becomes Electra," "Ah, Wilderness!" and other plays had established him as the leader in his field.

With Jones as the minister of the palette, Pioneer produced an experimental two-reeler, which proved definitely that natural colors had arrived on the screen. The picture, "La Cucaracha," grossed $250,000, more than any short in black and white had ever drawn.

"Becky Sharp" followed. It cost approximately $1,000,000. Whether or not it shows a profit does not concern the Whitneys much. To them, the important thing is that, artistically, it has been hailed by most critics as a success, as the final "arrival" of natural color to the screen. Some critics were cold to it, but they felt that way not because of imperfections in color reproduction, but because of the tremendous possibility that abuse may, and in their opinion, will, destroy color films. As the reviewer of the sophisticated and wary New Yorker said:

"What someone else, someone other than Mr. Jones, someone, say, with a weakness for pretty postcards, may do with the marvels of the new scientific advance I shudder to think I may some day know."

More of Them Planned.

Pioneer Pictures has on its schedule eight more color movies. It has been reported that the next one will contain songs and dances.

Every motion picture studio in southern California is already beginning to experiment once more with the colored cinema, or is actually planning the production of a film in natural colors. It costs about 30 per cent more to make a picture in colors than to make it in black and white, not counting additional staging extravagances.

It has been conservatively estimated that there will be at least ten full length color features made during 1936, that in three years half the films will be in color and that by the end of five years at least 60 per cent of all the films made in Hollywood, at least, will be in color.

One of the most ambitious of the new color movies will be the one now in production at the Disney studios. It will be the first full-length animated cartoon ever made, and will be called "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," based, of course, upon the fairy tale of the same name. What a stupendous undertaking this is may be understood from the fact that somewhere between $8,000 and 100,000 separate drawings and exposures will be necessary to a cartoon of this length. It has already been in the making a year and a half and Disney estimates that it will take another year and a half to complete it. The cost will approximate $850,000.

Only this fall will you begin to see animated cartoons other than the Disney product on the screen in all the primary colors. That is because Disney, with his customary foresight, acquired a year's exclusive contract on the use of full Technicolor for animated cartoons. That contract expires some time this month. The other cartoons you have seen in colors of late were made by the old two-color process.

Technicolor is made in the subtractive color process which has been mentioned. There are three separate magazines of film which run through the camera. Each of them photographs one of the primary colors from which all colors are compounded. From each of the negatives a matrix (which may be loosely termed as similar to an engraved plate such as is used in printing) is made.

How It's Done.

A properly prepared film holds the master black. Color impressions are transferred from the matrices to this master film by the use of what are called subtractive primary dyes, in a process of imbibition. The dyes used are cyan (minus red), magenta (minus green) and yellow (minus blue). All colors must be transferred to the master black before the color print is ready.

Such an explanation is, of course, vague at best, but is about all that can be accomplished within the limits of a short article.

The process is foolproof, in that it is impossible to alter the colors. The camera registers the colors exactly as it sees them. The only human errors possible are lack of taste in preparing the settings and lack of precision in printing the film.

Certainly it will be no eye-strain to enjoy your favorite star's complete beauty, color of hair, lips, eyes and all. Or will it? For instance you will perhaps be surprised to learn that Myrna Loy has green eyes—but don't fear, for they're beautiful, just the same.

Colorists are predicting that there will be a new vogue for blondes because of color pictures, for the best type of such films is the true blonde with cleanly chiseled features.

And for you girls who would like to get into pictures, here's good news! You won't have to diet so strenuously. Color pictures make you look slimmer!

The breeding and keeping of dogs always have been the hobby of kings and other rulers. For example, it is known that Arabian kings more than 2,000 years ago gave to the Saluki (racy hunting hound) the choicest tid-bits from the table and the finest linens from their beds.

SYNOPSIS

"He don't go up there only to see Will," Jenny urged, defensively. And she asked: "How come him and Zeke to fight?"

Marm Pierce started to speak, hesitated for a moment, then said almost casually: "Well, Bart said he was going down brook fishing, and he came by the foot of the path that leads up to Will's place, and decided to stop by and see Will. So he climbed up, and there was Huldy on a ledge at the head of the path; and he said Zeke come along and ordered him off the place, and he didn't want no trouble, so he sets out for home."

"But when he got to the bridge, Zeke had come down the road and cut him off; and they had words, and then they went at it."

She concluded: "And Zeke kind of out-argued him. That's all."

Jenny had a sudden vivid memory of a day when she too had surprised Huldy on that high ledge, lying naked as a pagan in the sun's embrace, and she wondered; but she only said slowly: "Will's going to feel bad. He wouldn't want anything that'd make talk about Huldy. Bart hadn't ought to have fit with Zeke."

"Guess he's realized that his own self by now," Marm Pierce assented. "Looked to me he'd bit off too big a chunk when he tackled Zeke at all."

"Bad off, is he?"

Marm Pierce hesitated, shook her head. "No, not to speak of," she said. "Only—in a mighty bad humor. He was snarling and barking at Amy when I come away."

And she said slowly, half to herself: "I was a mind to fetch Amy home here, to stay the night with us."

"Why?" Jenny asked, puzzled.

The older woman shook her head. "I dunno. I didn't like the way Bart acted. Looked to me he might take his spleen out on her."

CHAPTER VI

IN THIS fall of the year of Huldy's return, it had seemed for a while that the tension in the Valley, centering as it did about Will Ferrin's farm, must flame up into something like a conflagration. But after that day when Zeke trounced Bart, as though this explosion had eased the general pressure, nothing happened for a while. Amy did not come soon again to see Jenny and her grandmother. Deep snow hindered; and when it presently thawed and was gone, mud lay ankle deep in the wet woods, and then snow fell again, and so presently winter shut down across the land. Thereafter, till spring, neither Jenny nor her grandmother went far from the house. The girl had been used to wander sometimes in the winter woods; but this winter there were many tracks along the brook, where men had come up from the stream mill to Bart's. Marm Pierce, and Jenny's own wit, warned her not to risk casual encounters with these strangers.

"Most times, I wouldn't worry a mile about them," the old woman admitted. "But a woman like Huldy, she'll poison every man any where around her, till you can't tell what'll happen!"

So for the most part Jenny stayed at home. Bart now and then stopped on the way to the village, and this was almost their only contact with the world. Disaster might have come to them and none have known for days; but Jenny was not afraid. It was not easy to be afraid, in the presence of her old grandmother. That dauntless old woman was as volatile, as brisk, as diligent and as crisp of spirit as of old;

Zeke handled him, certainly."

She chuckled. "Good thing for me," she reflected. "Bart's been needing to have his comb trimmed for long time."

"Why?" Jenny protested, puzzled.

"I hate a strutting man, or a cackling one," Marm Pierce said securely. "Or a har!"

and the two were congenial and content.

And Will was always in Jenny's mind, and she held long hopes and dreams. And sometimes to ease the girl, Marm Pierce led her to talk of Will, and sometimes they played a game of make-believe in which Huldy did not exist, and Will was free to come to Jenny.

But the game was apt to end in a sudden choking longing which left Jenny white and breathless; till the old woman forbore.

In the spring, Marm Pierce had some taint of rheumatism in her old bones, which resisted all her remedies; so she sent Jenny to gather herbs that might relieve it. Also, one day she bade the girl bring a root of the water lily, from one of the deep boggy pools in the brook near the cedar swamp, and concocted a feebly brew which she made Jenny drink day by day. The girl protested:

"Amy's Drunk Some Apple Spray!"

"But, Granny, I don't need a tonic. I feel fine."

"Hush, child," the old woman insisted. "I know what I'm about." Yet she did explain: "Spring's the time when the new sap runs in a tree, or in a body, too; and that may be all well enough if the tree's to go on flowering and bearing. But if some hurt or harm come to it, why the quick pulse of the sap just makes it bleed to death the quicker. This will slow your blood, child. Do as I bid."

And Jenny drank, obediently; and as the frost came out of the ground, and the hardwoods put on their veil of new green, the deep flood of new life flowed through her, too. Indoors all winter, she welcomed this release, and went more often abroad, and strength was in her like a flowing well.

Once, wandering toward the bridge, she met Amy by the brook. It was long since they had seen one another, and Jenny thought Amy looked broken and old and very tired. She said some word of solicitude, but Amy fled from her kindness as though in flight or in despair. At home again, Jenny related this circumstance to her grandmother.

"She looks real poorly, Granny," she confessed. "Maybe if you'd give her some of this tonic you give me . . ."

"Sulphur and molasses is likely all she needs," Marm Pierce guessed. "Amy knows that well as me, but if she needs me, I know she'll let me know."

be, there's times it won't help you!"

The girl sensed something hidden in her tone. "Why, Granny? What do you mean?" she asked.

"I dunno as I know," Marm Pierce confessed. And she cried suddenly, flailing with high wrath: "Child, if I knowed for certain, think I'd be a standing here!"

"But what could you do?" Jenny whispered, all bewildered.

"A-plenty," Marm Pierce told her stoutly. "I'd know enough to do."

Yet more than this she would not say.

Jenny did not go to Amy's funeral. Marm Pierce that day suffered an onset of lumbago, and lay prone while Jenny slowly ironed her back with a hot flatiron over blankets, till the old woman writhed from the heat, yet declared she felt better by and by. Jenny was as well pleased to stay at home. Will would have been at the burying; and Jenny might have seen him there; and she shrank from seeing him.

They had during that summer word now and then of Will, and of Zeke; and Huldy, too. The word ran through the Valley that nowadays Zeke never went where Huldy did not go. And in September there were vague, fragmentary reports that he had struck Huldy, had tried to choke her, in some passion of anger at her for a cause unknown.

Will, it appeared, made no effort to send Zeke away; he treated Zeke with a slow courtesy, and Huldy, too. He seemed to preserve by his demeanor the fiction that Zeke was a loyal hand, a willing hand about the farm; that Huldy was all a wife should be. Old Wm Haven, according to rumor, taunted him one day; and then shrank in affright before Will's blazing eyes, and babbled his apologies, withdrawing the offending word. This had happened in Liberty village, by the store, with other men about; and it was said that Will had looked like death, till the others hurried Wm away.

And Jenny thought of Huldy moving insolently to and fro about the farm, doing the housework with a casual ease—it was agreed that she was a good housekeeper—idling alone on the ledge above the brook, strolling in the orchard or across the fields; and always with Zeke like a jealous guardian on her heels.

Zeke, some one said, was not so stalwart as he had used to be. He had begun to cough, and to lose weight. It was even predicted that he might not live the winter through. Bart came to the door one day, on his way home from the village, and he said:

"Huldy and Zeke was in Liberty today. Driv' over in Will's sleigh." This was in February, with snow deep on the road. He chuckled: "If Zeke and me went at it again, I guess I could handle him now. He's still pitiful, this last six months."

"You leave the pore thing be, Bart," Marm Pierce warned him. "He's got enough trouble on his hands."

Bart nodded soberly. "It's a wonder to me how Will stands it," he confessed. "I see her today. She's the same as ever, with an eye for every man around, and that smiling way she has."

Marm Pierce, putting away the parcels he had brought, asked with a glance toward the dining room whether Jenny had withdrawn;

"Will wan't along with them today?"

"Didn't see him, no," Bart returned. "He stays to home, the most of the time."

And he chuckled, and said: "It was funny to see the men today, kind of circling, and watching, like they was waiting for something. Like a bunch of crows around a sick horse, waiting to see what was going to happen next." And he said: "Zeke, he won't last long!"

"Guess you won't go to his funeral when he dies," Marm Pierce commented.

"Oh, I don't hold a thing against Zeke," Bart assured her. "I figure I've got all the better of our argument, by now."

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

ETHIOPIA, a familiar name in the headlines these days, boasts a long and imposing history. The kings of this ancient empire are traced from Orl of 4478 B. C. to Haile Selassie the First of A. D. 1935—with time out, naturally, from the date of the Deluge until the fall of the Tower of Babel. According to tradition the queen of Sheba was an Ethiopian. She may possibly have lived in what we now call Ethiopia, and certainly she included it in her extended domain.

Modern Ethiopia includes more than 350,000 square miles of the rich and productive northeastern African plateau. It is mainly a mountainous region, much broken by deep valleys. Arid, semi-desert country surrounds it on every side. It does not touch the sea, although some Ethiopian feudal chieftains like to grasp a marine telescope as they pose for a formal photograph.

In the population there are, perhaps, 5,000,000 Christians of the true Ethiopian (Hamitic-Semitic) type. They are the inheritors of an ancient civilization under whose feudal form of government are estimated to be 7,000,000 Moslems and pagans. The latter are mainly negroes.

The country is surrounded by African colonial possessions of Great Britain, France and Italy. As the Ethiopia of Solomon's time, it probably included all of these adjacent territories, with an Egyptian frontier, and that part of southwestern Arabia known today as the Yemen and Hadhramaut.

There is in Ethiopia a very evident mixture of Asia and Africa. Some of the blood came from ancient Palestine, some from Arabia, and some from the shores of the Caspian. Authorities do not agree as to the elements in this African

CORN'S TRIMMED

"How's the undertow?"
"Fine; I saw a chiropodist before I came down."

Addis Ababa is sighted in a forest of blue gum trees, across a rolling, grassy plain.

A ride of 20 minutes on mule or horseback, or five minutes by motor, takes the arriving traveler to the main part of the city. Addis Ababa has good streets and no "across the railway tracks" quarter. It has also legations, consulates, hotels, many American motorcars, airplanes of sort, and some presentable business buildings. On one of the two principle elevations of the city is the ever-interesting market place. Here once stood the great tree which served for generations as a gibbet. The other main elevation is crowned by the group of buildings which make up the imperial palace. The most imposing edifice on this designated "Hill of the Gebbi" is the Audience Hall of the Conquering Lion of the Tribe of Judah, constructed of stone and given its high-sounding title by order of the late Emperor Menelik. Menelik claimed his title by virtue of his descent from that first Menelik who was born to Sheba after her visit to Solomon.

Ethiopia claims to be the oldest Christian sovereign state. The teachings of Christ were introduced about A. D. 830 by two shipwrecked Phoenician youths. Before they became Christians, the ruling classes of Ethiopians were adherents of Judaism. Their present church ceremonial retains many traces of that great and venerable religion.

After the professions of priest and soldier, agriculture is the principal occupation in Ethiopia. The country is very fertile, though methods of cultivation are still primitive. Many fine beef cattle are produced, and the people are great meat eaters. They have what might be called a ceremonial custom of eating a bit of raw beef as a sort of hors d'oeuvre.

In addition to the ordinary kinds of stock, Ethiopian farmers in parts of the country raise civet cats for commercial purposes. From these animals they obtain a liquid musk marketable to French and American perfumers at $2 an ounce. The chase is also a commercialized industry in Ethiopia, and naturally ivory heads the list of its products.

Many an Ethiopian leopard involuntarily contributes his skin to American feminine fashion. As many as 100,000 of these spotted skins have gone to American furriers in a single year. Also monkey furs are an item of profitable trade. A shy member of the monkey tribe, called the guereza, lives in the trees of the Ethiopian highlands. Their long, silky, black-and-white fur was worn by the Ethiopians as capes until Parisian dressmakers fancied it as a trimming for feminine finery. Lately the Ethiopian government has decided to protect its wild game by requiring the taking out of licenses and payment of hunters' fees.

The Harar district, town and province, is the center of production of cultivated coffee in Ethiopia. The bean produced is of excellent quality and ranks next only to Mocha in world markets. It is called "long-berry Mocha" and is sold to a discriminating clientele in the United States. Although the Harar plantations are descended from seed introduced from the Mocha district in Arabia, Ethiopia is the home of coffee. The tree was found originally by Arab traders in the Ethiopian province of Kafa, from which it took its name. Seed was taken from Kafa to Arabia, and thence came back to Harar. According to the Arabs, the cultivation of coffee also spread to other parts of the world from the Yemen, in southwestern Arabia.

In Kafa and adjoining parts of southwestern Ethiopia may be seen today vast and virgin forests of coffee of the indigenous variety. It necessarily grows without cultivation or care and thousands of tons of the berries fall to the ground in waste each year. The outer fringes of some of these forests are worked by natives in sections not too far from export trading centers, where the market value of coffee is known. Egypt buys much of this coffee, shipped via Khartoum, in place of former importations of the Brazilian product.

DANNY'S HOME-COMING

WHEN the first Jolly Sunbeams came stealing through the Green Forest, Danny Meadow Mouse began to be uneasy. He was thoroughly rested and the dangers of the dreadful night were already forgotten. Perhaps I should not say that they were forgotten, for, of course, that isn't quite true. But Danny had quite put them out of his mind. That is

The first day of this railway journey ends usually at six in the afternoon, at Diredawa, the first town of importance after the train enters Ethiopia. It is on the fringe of a plateau 4,000 feet above sea level and a 200 mile climb from the coast. An interesting side trip from Diredawa is the old Mohammedan walled town of Harar, four hours away by rough motor trip or a whole day by muleback. Camels, horses, or mules are available as a means of transportation, but the mule is considered the most appropriate for one of actual or apparent high station in life.

The second night of the three-day train journey is passed on the banks of the Awash river, one of the peculiar streams of the world. At this point it is a swiftly flowing river in a deep canyon. Rising on the Ethiopian plateau, it turns northward toward the Red sea, but loses itself in the Danakil lowlands short of its natural destination. Awash consists mainly of small railway yard, a one-story brick building housing a hotel under quasi-Hellenic management, a scattering of native shacks, and many eats. Food and accommodations are simple and the most essential thing is a good mosquito net.

ADDIS ABABA, THE CAPITAL.

The train gets under way again the next morning at dawn and rolls through lovely grass and forest, gazelles and antelope. Occasionally one sees the dark blur of a rhino breakfasting on the far side of the Awash river canyon. About four o'clock in the afternoon of this third day the sprawling city of Ad-

he knew just what to do and where to go. He could see Redtail the Hawk sailing round and round, high in the blue, blue sky. He knew that Redtail was watching with those wonderful eyes of his for a fat Meadow Mouse, but that didn't worry Danny in the least. You see, he knew just how to keep out of sight.

After a while he reached one of his own private little paths. The brown grass hung over it making a regular little tunnel of it. Danny scampered along as fast as his short legs would take him and so presently he reached his snug, safely hidden little home. The half-grown children raced out to meet him to see if he had brought them something. Inside, the babies were having an after-dinner nap. Of Nanny Meadow Mouse there was no sign. You see, Nanny was out getting her own dinner. It was while he waited for her that Danny began to wonder how ever he would be able to explain his long absence. He suspected that Nanny would be very cross, very cross, indeed. He suspected that he was due for a scolding, such a scolding as only Nanny's sharp tongue could give. He knew that he deserved it. He was glad, ever so glad, to be home, but he felt most uncomfortable. By and by, as he sat just outside his snug little home, he heard footsteps hurrying along one of the private little paths. It was Nanny hurrying home to her babies. When she saw Danny she stopped short and stared at him as if she thought her eyes were playing her trick. Then, instead of the sharp words he expected and knew he richly deserved, Nanny rushed to him crying, "Oh, Danny, I'm so glad! I'm so glad! I thought you were dead! And Danny Meadow Mouse knew then how great is love.

the way with the little people of the Green Forest and the Green Meadows. Dangers that are past are not worth thinking about. They must keep their minds clear for possible dangers to come. So Danny's thoughts were not of what he had been through, but were wholly of getting home.

He thanked his cousin, Whitefoot, for all the latter had done for him and then climbed out of the hollow stump and once more started for the Green Meadows and home. As long as he was in the Green Forest he was anxious. He didn't feel at home there. He didn't know what to expect. He imagined all sorts of dangers. But the instant he reached the edge of the Green Meadows his heart became light. He still had a long way to go and many things might happen before he reached that snug little home and Nanny Meadow Mouse and the babies. But Danny's heart was light, for on the Green Meadows

WITHOUT IDEALS THE SOUL DIES"

HAT sounds like the title of a sermon and that is what it was. The sermon dealt with the importance of ideals from a religious viewpoint. And it was from this point that the minister said: "The soul dies when ideals vanish." And it occurred to me how true this was from the most practical viewpoint of everyday life. Ideas are regarded as matters almost ephemeral. And yet they are among the most solid, substantial influences in life. If you stop to think about it, wealth may be very transient. Success may be transient, but usually is transient. But the principles we set for ourselves, the ideals to which we adhere, if we adhere to them strongly enough, are a rock of refuge in a storm. And the point is that our principles and our ideals are a possession for whose permanence we are dependent on no other person, on no quirks or circumstances, but only upon ourselves. The older we grow the more we realize that the things which bring the most satisfaction in life, the old, substantial, dependable joys, those which stay and grow with the years, are the fundamental interests and pleasures like love of family and old friends. These are really the things that count. The most exciting and glamorous life will come to lean and drab days without them. Having them, having love and companionship, life may be very full with little of the worldly possessions.

And so holding to our ideals gives substance to life, a spiritual strength which is really life. And people who understand their importance are very likely to find too that without them the soul is dead.

FALL COLORS TAKE RENAISSANCE TRENDStrong Emphasis Placed on Green Tones.

Color, vital to the fall mode, is of more importance than it has been in several seasons.

Designers say only about 50 per cent of their collections are in black this season as against 70 per cent last year.

White no longer leads the evening mode, being important chiefly as a background for metals.

The indication from exclusive lines is that there will be strong emphasis in silks on green tones, including a rich bronze green as well as a pale grayed green similar to rosemary.

Gray is slated for high style importance and is particularly effective in metal mateless.

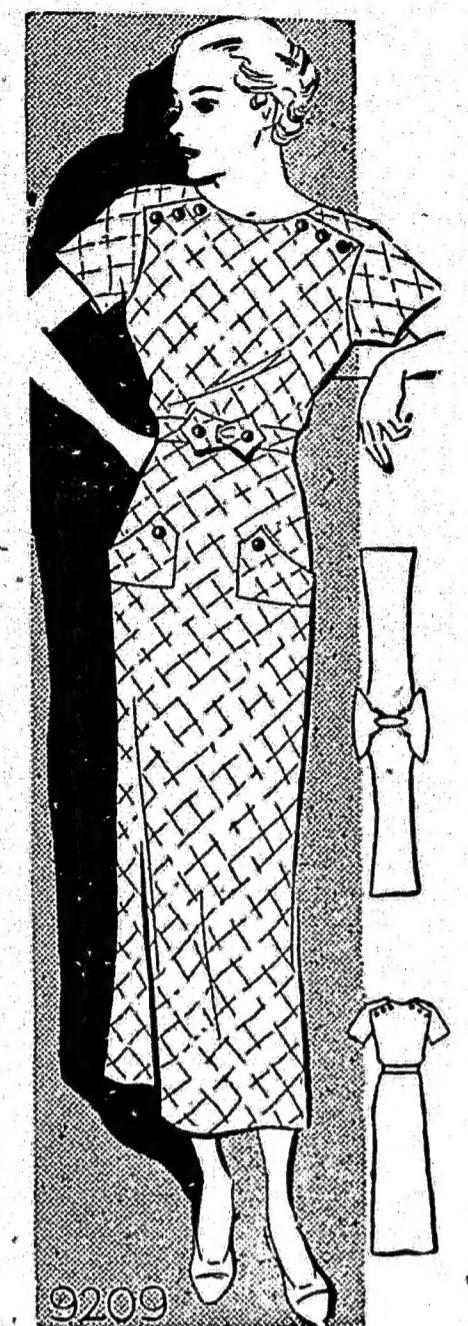

Silver metallics on a black ground with much of the black showing through to produce a steely or nacre effect are also considered very smart for evening.

The most exclusive metallized silks feature pale subtle colorings, although vivid tones are also shown in some metallics.

The renaissance influence will be felt in both volume and exclusive silk lines for fall. The purples, clear reds and tangerine shades in this color range are considered to be outstanding. Deep greens, browns, and slate blue are also slated for popular consumption.

HATS WITH UNIQUE TRIMMING FOR FALL*Veils Are Used in New Ways by Designers.

At the threshold of a new season hats are of primary interest. So far velvets seem to crave the best of the news. From the wide-brimmed crownless effects, to the tiny tufted and shirred toques which are so new and reminiscent of the nineties, the new hats are usually completed or complemented by veils. Almost invariably the veils are worn under these crownless effects, adding a real protection to the coiffure. Sometimes they end with the smallest of frills as a facing and frame for the face. Again they appear single or double in undulating frames for the face. One wide hat noted at a smart gathering used much ostrich trimming, which edged the full veil sweeping below the chin.

A number of hats use the back "window shade" effect veils, gathered full only across the back of the hat and making a frame for the face.

But perhaps the most interesting are the little toques which used chenille-dotted veils or all-over Chantilly effects which cover the face closely and snugly to the chin. The windmill effect hats, which jut out in every direction and are made usually of felt or of soft velour, have simple nose veils.

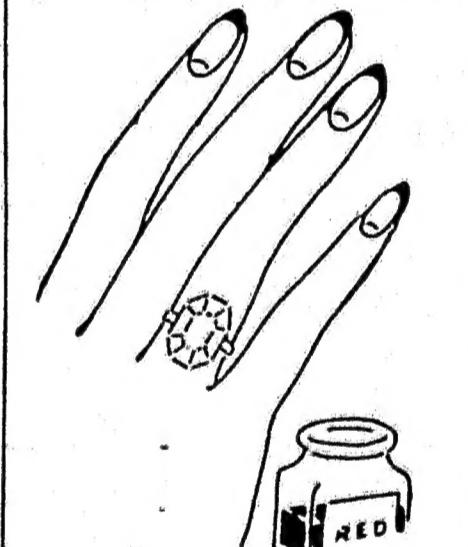

Use Flowers to Harmonize With the Dress You Wear

If you like to pin fresh flowers on your summer clothes, make sure that they bear some definite relation to the costume you are wearing. For instance, orchids would look silly on a two-piece linen outfit of the spectator sports type. However, they would be charming on rather dressy, dark chiffon street suit.

Daisies, nasturtiums and other casual flowers that grow in your garden make nice boutonnieres for sport and simple printed office frocks. On hot days save the more pretentious carefully cultivated blooms for evening and dresser occasions.

MINUTE MAKE-UPS

In the year 1653, the tomb of Childerle, the father of Clovis, was opened, and the valuable contents removed. The skeletons of Childerle's war horse and of his page were found; also, about 300 small objects which the French heralds took for bees "of purest gold, their wings being inlaid with a red stone-like cornelian."

Although these small ornaments resembled bees, they were in reality what is known as "feurons," and were supposed to have been attached to the trappings of the war horse. Later, they were sent to Louis XIV, but it was not until the time of Napoleon that they were given any real significance. He adopted the "bee" as a symbol of the enterprise and activity which his reign represented, and he caused the symbols to be sprinkled profusely over the imperial robes.

FLASHES FROM PARIS

Flowers are worn in the hair. Jet buttons sparkle on the new frocks.

Italian renaissance is important style influence.

A lavish use of ostrich is predicted for fall and winter.

Metal effects of every description elaborate the new mode. Chantilly lace hats and matching lace gloves were worn at the races.

New costume accents stress petit point belts, buttons and other accessories.

Inconsistency Noted in Application of Words

One wonders how the same name—which etymologically is equivalent to “twice cooked”—came to be applied to two things so widely diverse as the English and the American biscuit. Yet, although the Englishman in the United States must ask for a “cracker” if he wants what he has hitherto called a “biscuit,” he finds, to his surprise, that an American firm which manufactures it on a large scale registers itself under the name, not of the National Cracker company, but of the National Biscuit company.

One might, perhaps, mention as a further though minor example of verbal inconsistency the fact that, while it is an “administration” at Washington that corresponds to the “government” at Westminster, the individuals who compose it are known as “cabinet ministers,” not “cabinet ministers” as they would be called in England.

The Briton learns that in the United States “boot” is specialized to mean what he calls a “high boot” or a “Wellington,” whereas the footwear that he ordinarily calls “boots” is known there as “shoes.”

But the mystery that remains to be cleared up is why the Englishman should employ a “shoeblack” to clean what he calls his “boots,” while an American employs a “boothblack” to perform a similar service on his “shoes.”—Herbert W. Horwitt in the Atlantic Monthly.

Long-Lived Family

That Canada has families with a record for longevity is demonstrated by the Colquhoun family. Eight of the original family of 11 persons are still alive, and their ages total 627 years, their average age is 78 years, 4½ months. The family now consists of J. D. Colquhoun, 87, Wales, Ont.; Charles, 85, Sacramento, Calif.; Mrs. John Hay, 81, Detroit, Mich.; S. K., 78, Deloraine, Man.; M. M., 78, and Miss A. M., 72, of Sacramento; J. E., 70, of Waskada, Man., and Dr. Philip, 70, of Waterville, Que. The family are the sons and daughters of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Colquhoun, who settled in Dundas county in 1844.—Montreal Herald.

STAR DUST
MOVIE AND RADIO

By VIRGINIA VALE

HERE'S a Cinderella story from real life that has shown business talking from New York to Hollywood. A few weeks ago a pretty little eighteen-year-old girl stepped before the microphone at an NBC amateur hour. Asked what she was going to sing, she replied in a lovely contralto voice that she was not going to sing. Instead, she was going to “talk her song.”

She did it so effectively that eleven days later she began an engagement in the famous Rainbow room on the Rockefeller Center roof.

The girl is Doris Wester, green-eyed ash-blond, who had studied for a year with Niels Kempner, well-known musical conductor. An official of Rockefeller center, sitting in his home in Westchester, happened to hear her over the radio and immediately signed her up for the Rainbow room—the “tops” in the night-club entertainment world in New York.

Since her opening in the Rainbow room, Miss Wester has received offers from the stage, motion pictures and radio. Meanwhile she continues to sing nightly before the swanky audiences, entrancing them with her youthful beauty and an appealing, intimate style of vocal delivery.

Doris Wester was born in Chicago. She now lives with her aunt and uncle in a modest apartment in Jackson Heights, New York. At eighteen, the show world seems in a fair way to become her oyster.

Some of the best news about future broadcasts that has bobbed up recently is the announcement that Helen Hayes will be on the air for half an hour once a week, starting September 30.

And it's interesting to note that she will not do abbreviated versions of stage plays, but will appear in a serial written especially for her, and for radio, by Edith Meiser, who wrote the script for the radio version of “Sherlock Holmes.” Miss Hayes will be, on the air, an every-day young woman facing the problems that confront most of us.

And there's no one who can do that type of young woman better than she can. She tried her hand at it once in a play that didn't do very well, but enabled her to give a performance that every one remembered. If they were lucky enough to see it.

Janet Gaynor gave a lot of people something to think about when she cleaned out her bungalow dressing room on the Fox lot before departing for a vacation in Hawaii.

She insisted that she was just going to take a vacation. When she was reminded that it wasn't customary to take one's belongings out of one's dressing room on such occasions, she made no explanation. And rumors are flying to the effect that, despite that she still has a contract, she won't make any more pictures for Fox.

Her departure came soon after Winfield Sheehan resigned from what has become Fox-Twentieth Century—“forced out.” It's usually said, by the Twentieth Century wizard, Darryl Zanuck, and his partner, Joseph Schenck, but as Mr. Sheehan's contract was bought off for a good big figure, and he is in great demand at other studios, it would not seem that much forcing had to be done. Sheehan is too clever and experienced a picture maker to find himself out on a limb, as usual.

So people began putting together the fact that he had left the company, and the rumors that Janet Gaynor would become Mrs. Sheehan, which bob up about every so often. But there would not seem to be much possibility, at present, that she would make that particular change in her name, as it seems more than likely that the opera singer, Jeritza, will be Mr. Sheehan's bride.

Anyway, it's all hot-weather gossip in Hollywood, and the only fact is that the Gaynor belongings left the studio when she did—although both Will Rogers and Shirley Temple, who are vacationing, left theirs at the old home stand when they departed for vacations.

Margaret Sullivan is Universal's little pet; she's their one big star, and they've bought for her a story, “Marlus,” by the author of the stage play that was also a good movie, “Topaze.”

If you've liked Frances Langford on the air you'll be glad to hear that she is doing very well indeed in the movies. She'll be leading lady in “Collegiate,” with Joe Penner and Jack Oakie, and she's done very well in “Broadway Rhythm” and “Every Night at Eight.”

And, while we're speaking of Joe Penner, he's bought a home in Beverly Hills, so it looks as if he planned to settle down in California.

Fred Allen may be making a picture, but his heart's in radio. Soon after he arrived in Hollywood he called on all the Los Angeles radio editors.

Charlie Farrell, who hasn't made nearly enough pictures recently to satisfy his many friends, will be seen in “The Crowd Cheers.”

Edgar Kennedy has been making very funny shorts for a good long while—surely you've seen him in some of those “Average Family” shorts, with Florence Lake as his wife. Now he's being rewarded by getting a part in “Long Haul,” an RKO full-length drama.

Young Irving Thalberg, who now is five years old, apparently takes after his mother when it comes to swimming. He dives very well, and after all, that isn't swimming, for Norma Shearer was practically in the championship class in the days before she turned artist's model and then became a picture star.

Louise Ralner did so well with her role in “Escapade” that, when she rushed off to Canada for a vacation, she had to come straight back; Metro wanted her to play opposite Ronald Colman in “The Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo”—and what a name that will be to get into lights on theater marquees!

Miss Ralner seems to be picking the best of the leading men for herself in these first American pictures of hers. And certainly her performance in “Escapade” was good enough to deserve whatever the studios can give her.

There's heartbreak in an announcement that went out recently, to the effect that Loretta Young, and not Rita Canino, will play the lead in the new version of “Itama.” It was decided that the picture could be made a bigger feature than was originally intended, it seems, and that a more experienced actress should play the lead, so the little Canino will have a minor role instead of playing the heroine.

do something modern. First thing we know he'll yearn to play villains!

Odds and Ends . . . “Anchors Aweigh,” that Annapolis picture, will now be known as “Navy Sweethearts”; somebody else owned the first title . . . Norma Talmadge startled the entire film industry by saying to a group of autograph seekers who surrounded her, “Go away—I don't need you any more” . . . They say now that that new Chaplin picture will be released in October . . . Estelle Taylor may appear in opera . . . Noah Beery's son, Noah Jr., is going to marry Buck Jones' daughter, Maxine . . . Lydia Robert wouldn't say whether she had a black eye or a stye, when she arrived in New York with her bridegroom, but she refused to remove her dark glasses for photographers . . . Thomas Meighan's health is improving rapidly; his friends had given up hope for his recovery.

Ancient Remedies

If you had lived in a village during the Eighteenth century and suffered from gout, your physician might have advised you to swallow two ounces of soap a day for three months—besides oyster shell or egg shell powder. For smallpox, says a writer in the Montreal Herald, you would have been given a black powder made from 30 to 40 toads burnt in a new pot. A daily half-pint liquor made by boiling mistletoe berries and leaves in ale was specific for fits—at least, according to the village doctor.

Tomb of Hawaii King

The tomb of Lunailio, sixth king of Hawaii, is opposite the city hall on King street. Lunailio's dying wish was that his body should be placed in a tomb built by his father, Charles Kanaina. It accordingly was built in the grounds of the Kawahahoa church. He and the first Kamehameha, whose burial place is unknown, are the only Hawaiian monarchs who are not buried in the royal mausoleum in Nuuanu valley.
